

The Times of India.

A Tata Memorial at the Bangalore Institute

(March 13, 1922

L to R: Sir Alfred Hay (Director, IISc), H. H. The Yuvraj, H. H. The Maharaja of Mysore, The Hon. Mr. W. P. Barton (Resident) and Sir Dorab Tata (son of the Founder of IISc)

The Maharaja of Mysore, this afternoon, unveiled a statue of the late Mr. Jamsetji Tata at the Indian Institute of Science in the presence of a large and distinguished company of visitors and residents, including Sir Dorab Tata and Lady Dorab Tata, The Yuvaraj of Mysore and the Hon'ble Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Barton. General Sir William Marshal, Lord and Lady Ruthven and party, Sir Leslie and Lady Miller and all leading officers of the state.

Sir Dorab Tata, in proposing a vote of thanks, said "To my father, learning was a religion and new knowledge, the aim of all learning. He had travelled far and wide and had foreseen that if the country was to be enabled to develop its vast potentialities in men and material, two things were necessary; firstly the encouragement of learning and secondly, the application of science to industries..."